

Access & Insight: Webinar

Proxy Voting for Impact: A Conversation About Corporate Governance in 2017

With political upheaval sweeping across the developed world, corporate accountability to shareholders and stakeholders matters more than ever. Voting proxies and engaging corporations are longstanding tools for investors to bring about changes in corporate environmental, social and governance policy.

As proxy voting season nears, we hope you will join our panel of corporate governance experts who will discuss how investors are having impact by using their influence as owners of public companies. Some of the topics we will address include:

- Should board oversight of corporate strategy include climate and other sustainability issues? What are companies and investors doing about it?
- Is Say-on-Pay working? If not, what comes next?
- The sleeping giants awake: How will increased involvement by large asset managers like State Street and BlackRock change the corporate governance landscape?
- Proxy access: What now? What can be learned from experiences overseas?

APRIL 7, 2017 12:00 - 1:00 PM REGISTER HERE

Our Panel:

Catherine Jackson is President of Selegna Inc., a consulting firm providing research and engagement services to global institutional investors concerning the environmental, social and governance practices of their North American investments.

Karina Litvack Karina is a corporate governance and sustainable investment expert with a 25-year career in finance and sustainable business practice. She is on the Board of Directors of Italian energy firm Eni.

Timothy Smith is Director of ESG (Environmental, Social and Governance) Shareowner Engagement, and leads Walden Asset Management's ongoing shareholder engagement program to promote greater corporate leadership on ESG issues.

John Wilson is the Head of Corporate Governance, Engagement and Research for Cornerstone Capital Group. Previously, he was Director of Corporate Governance for TIAA-CREF. John writes and presents widely about the relevance of corporate governance to investment performance.